3 Strategies to keep your digital footprint appropriate and safe

1

- If you use different social media apps, they are going to expand your digital footprint and get yourself known. Be friendly and social and do fun and creative things on your page. You can build a good reputation on the internet. Your impression on the internet can affect you when you're getting a job or going to university.

2

- Make strong and memorable passwords for your social media. Then, make your page private so only certain people can see your posts. Delete unused apps and try to delete your data if you can. If you're really concerned about your digital footprint, check on google and you could ask to remove your digital footprint.

3

- Don't post inappropriate things on your page because people could easily just take a photo of it and release it. You shouldn't go to weird websites that could give you viruses and people could know that you're going to those websites. You should try to have a safe and appropriate search history.

New and important information I learned about digital footprints

- Your digital footprint can be easily found if people decide to search it up
- Information on the internet can last permanently so you have to be cautious about what you post because it could affect you for your life
- Employers look for your digital footprint to get an impression about you and it could impact you from getting a job or going to college
- Anything including text messages or your search history on incognito mode is also a digital footprint of yourself
- It is possible to remove your digital footprint from Google
